

Pauline Tait

Novelist & Children's Author

Author Bio

Pauline's necessity to write has emerged alongside a profound passion to engage and inspire our younger generations to become great readers. She feels strongly that children are our future, and reading is the fundamental basis of their learning.

Her years of experience in working with and assessing children from Primaries one to seven, who needed extra-curricular support, then creating and delivering individual learning plans to meet their specific needs, has only fuelled her passion.

Given Pauline didn't enjoy school herself, she wonders if her empathy towards children is due to the fact she understands. She found the subject matter dull but did love to read. She also loved being read to on the odd occasion that a teacher would read a chapter book and can still remember looking forward to the last half hour of an afternoon when the next chapter would be read. Pauline often bore this in mind when creating learning plans.

It took Pauline just over two decades to go from plot scribbler to published author because she allowed life to take her down a more secure path. A path she knew she would succeed in, a path that was acceptable in the world she had grown up in. She allowed herself to think writing was something she wasn't qualified to do, allowing herself to think writing was beyond her expertise and therefore she would fail. But, in her mid-forties, Pauline submitted her first manuscript and has not looked back.

www.paulinetait.com

Facebook: @ptauthor

Instagram:

@tait_pauline_author

Twitter: @PTait_author

07789 743 955

"A book read in one go, so much so that I hung on to the story, so moving at certain passages, captivating, full of suspense and twists and turns with very endearing characters. I love the author's writing so addictive." Reader review

"Excellent character depiction, plus an exciting storyline make for a roaring success." Reader review